

George Shumway

George was irascible. He was judgmental. He could barely tolerate his wife, but adored daughter Cathy.

George worked at the plant in Fernwood with son-in-law Tom Hartman and neighbor Charlie Hagers. He once tried to run for union office, but was set up by his opponent and ended his run in a sex scandal.

George disappeared for a long while, but returned as a convert to the cult Bogus Ziti. He showed up at Mary's kitchen door chanting and laughably pony-tailed.

He tried to be a wrestling empresario, but that netted nothing but financial loss.

George fell into a vat of Rustoleum and came out looking like Tab Hunter.

George was played by Philip Bruns, and for a short time, by Tab Hunter.

Back to "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" Characters

Back to "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" Pages

Back to The Mary Kay Place Place